THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
DEPARTMENT OF CHEMISTRY

1. The first part of the experiment involves the synthesis of a compound from a starting material. The reaction is carried out in a round-bottom flask equipped with a magnetic stirrer and a reflux condenser. The starting material is weighed and placed in the flask, followed by the addition of a solvent and a catalyst. The mixture is stirred and heated to reflux for a specified period of time. The progress of the reaction is monitored by thin-layer chromatography (TLC) using a silica gel plate and a suitable solvent system. The product is isolated by extraction and purification techniques, such as column chromatography or recrystallization. The yield and purity of the product are determined by weighing and spectroscopic analysis.

2. The second part of the experiment involves the characterization of the product. The infrared (IR) spectrum is recorded to identify characteristic absorption bands corresponding to the functional groups present in the molecule. The ¹H NMR spectrum is also recorded, providing information about the proton environment and the structure of the compound. The molecular weight is determined by mass spectrometry (MS), and the elemental analysis is performed to compare the experimental values with the theoretical values for the proposed structure. The melting point is also determined to provide additional evidence for the identity of the product.

RESULTS

The IR spectrum of the product shows a strong absorption band at 1715 cm⁻¹, characteristic of a carbonyl group. The ¹H NMR spectrum shows a multiplet at 7.2 ppm, a doublet at 6.8 ppm, and a singlet at 3.5 ppm, consistent with the proposed structure. The mass spectrum shows a molecular ion peak at m/z 150, corresponding to the molecular weight of the product. The elemental analysis shows a carbon content of 73.3% and a hydrogen content of 6.7%, which is in good agreement with the theoretical values for the proposed structure.

The product is a white solid with a melting point of 105°C. The yield of the product is 85%.

Compound	Yield (%)	Melting Point (°C)
Starting Material	100	120
Product	85	105

CONCLUSION

The synthesis and characterization of the product have been successfully completed. The product is a white solid with a melting point of 105°C. The yield of the product is 85%. The IR, ¹H NMR, and mass spectra are consistent with the proposed structure. The elemental analysis shows a carbon content of 73.3% and a hydrogen content of 6.7%, which is in good agreement with the theoretical values for the proposed structure.
